News of the death of a Pleasanton youth and the serious injury of several others as a result of Hallowe'en celebration added emphasis to the slogan being adopted in the township—"A Safe and a Sane Hallowe'en."

One of the quietest and "least devastating" Hallowe'en's ever known in the township passed without any material damage to life or property, according to reports from Deputy Sheriffs Henry Vervais and Tom Silva.

The younger element seems to have joined the oldsters in the opinion that Hallowe'en is the season for fun and not for property damage, officers report. At various schools bonfires and weenie roasts entertained the youngsters and at the same time furnished vigilantes to protect school property against marauding of less civic-minded folk.

When citizens gather for merry-making henceforth, life will be easier—in San Jose. Under a new policy, the WPA recreation project there will supply, on order, people guaranteed to liven up parties, organize games, and keep the ball of conversation rolling.

As long as citizens are paying for WPA, they may as well get their dividends in pleasure. And if the WPA party savers are really successful, it will be the first time a taxpayer has ever laughed when he saw where his money was going.

Officials Are To Be Chosen and Policy of Government Decided as Voters of State Go To Polls Tuesday in Epoch-Making Election

When the polls open for the election next Tuesday morning at 6 o'colck, the curtain will rise on one of the most dramatic episodes in the political history of California—compilations of results of which will be watched with keen interest not only throughout this country but in other nations.

Not only is a governor to be elected but a policy of government is to be decided, so radically do the aims and attitudes of the opposing candidates differ. The two outstanding candidates are Frank F. Merriam, Republican incumbent, representing the conservatives and Culbert L. Olson, Democratic state senator who is said to stand for radical phases of a changing day.

The next official of most interest to the common people is the Attorney General. Earl Warren, district attorney for Alameda County, piled up a tremendous vote in the primaries on Republican, Democratic and Progressive tickets. Opposing him are Walter Emmett Barry, Townsend; and Claude A. Watson, Prohibitionist.

The contest between Philip Bancroft, Republican, and Sheridan Downty, Democratic, Progressive, Townsend promises to be a heated one with Lillian Symes Clements, Socialist, also on the ticket.

In the Alameda County election, interest centers on the race between John J. Cox, funeral director and Dr. Mark L. Emerson, physician, for the position of county coroner.

The two amendments to the charter of Alameda county refer to compensation provisions of county employees, the first seeking to make it possible for county employees to receive retroactive benefits and the second which would establish a retirement system for county employees and provide for payment of retirement allowances to aged and disabled county employees.

Among the 25 constitutional amendments submitted to the voters of the State, of most outstanding interest and of perhaps most far-reaching effects not only in California but in other parts of the nation is No. 25, the "ham and eggs" measure which would pay $30 every Thursday to those over 50 years of age.

It is unfortunate for those who may be interested in the psychological aspects of the case that it will be impossible to know how many of those who vote "yes" on this proposition are over the age of 50 and feel that the dawn of Utopia is at hand and how many are younger and look forward to a reversal of the age-old law that a man must earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. It remains, however, an opportunity to discover what proportion of tht population of this State believe that something can be gotten for nothing and how many still hold to the tenets that "there is no short cut to Utopia."

It is possible that many will vote for this measure believing that by so doing they will hasten the day when a pension for the aged will be universal. Whether Amendment No. 25, is the proper approach to this condition is to be decided by the voters next Tuesday.

Amendments which seem to have received the most attention during the past few weeks include No. 1, referring to lawful and unlawful picketing, protection of marketing and transportation of produce, etc.; No. 2, which if it passes will curtail activities of medical students, doctors and laboratories in the use of animals for experimental purposes to control human illness and disease; No. 13 which would make it possible for a State tax to be levied for the support of publicly-owned utilities and No. 20, the "single tax" measure which would repeal the sales tax and lay the burden of practically all taxation upon land owners.

Polls will remain open from 6 a. m. to 7 p. m.

Schofield of San Francisco.

Schofield asked for more time to investigate exactly what happened when Mrs. Gilbert's car was pushed onto the Southern Pacific tracks and she was struck by a freight train, dying at the Hayward Hospital several hours later.

Dr. Cooke is charged with negligent homicide and is free on $1000 bail. He says he does not know whether he hit the Gilbert car or some other car, a third machine having been involved in the accident.

Country Club Of Township Ready To Improve Property

CENTERVILLE — A $1,200 improvement program was adopted at Tuesday's meeting of the Country Club of Washington Township, according to Mrs. E. A. Ellsworth, president. The project will be financed by a loan from the bank to be repaid in three or four years. The club recently completed payment on a $1,300 loan which was secured to build the stage.

The new program as outlined by Mrs. Paul Dougherty, chairman of the building committee, will include a new roof, re-tinting of the interior, refinishing of woodwork and floors, remodelling of the dining room and purchase of chairs and tables.

The club voted to donate $10 to the Christmas fund of the Livermore Veterans Hospital.

A full house heard Marcus Hall, Negro baritone, give a program of Negro Spirituals, folk songs and other numbers. He was accompanied by Mrs. Virginia Thomas Arnold, concert pianist.

The speaker of the afternoon was Mrs. Gerturde Bassel, formerly of Texas, chairman of the literary section of Northbrae Women's Club. She gave a report of her recent visit to Europe, dwelling particularly on literary shrines in England and on the continent. One of the highlights of her visit was the tea at Kensington Palace where she was a guest. Her graphic and unique recital of her travels was enthusiastically received.

The program was arranged by Mrs. Roland Bendel, Mrs. George Bonde, Mrs. C. N. Myrick and Mrs. C. H. Franklin.

SYNOPSIS

Richard Exon, a poor young Englishman, befriends elderly Matthew Gering, who at his death, gives him a statement claiming he, Gering, is Rudolph Elbert Virgil, Count of Brief, of ancient Austrian nobility who was betrayed 20 years before by his twin brother, Ferdinand, whose sentence for forgery he himself served. Ferdinand appropriated his title, property and daughter. Before he dies, Gering tells Exon there is a family secret, known only to the head of the house, to be found in the great tower at Brief, by a doorway none can ever find. Exon inherits his uncle's fortune and sets out to right Gering's wrongs. En route he encounters Percy Elbert Virgil, son of the villainous Ferdinand and sees him in conference with Inskip, a diamond merchant. He engages a valet. Winter, who hates Percy and meets by chance at a garage. John Herrick, who is a linguist and who as a youth served as a page at Gering's wedding, and had visited Brief. Herrick agrees to aid Exon. They establish headquarters at Brenda Revoke's farm at Raven, a few miles from Brief and make their plans. They find the castle almost inaccessible. They see a closed car occupied by Percy Virgil, a chauffeur and a woman. Hearing a dog scream, they see the chauffeur flogging it, just as a horse with a girl astride bounds along the path and is felled by a strung wire. The girl, unconscious, is picked up carelessly by the chauffeur and woman, who then run away, after dropping her. Exon rescues the girl and carries her to his waiting car. He identifies the girl as Elizabeth, daughter of the disowned Gering, tells her of her cousin's plot to abduct her and takes her to Raven, where he tells her the story of her father and promises to go the limit to help her right her father's wrongs. Elizabeth wins faith in her benefactor. Percy Virgil brings the police to Raven, announcing that two strangers are being sought for the kidnaping of Elizabeth. Herrick discomfits Virgil, tells of the morning's adventure, names a man called Max and hands the police a sealed envelope with the name of the leader in the abduction—Percy Virgil.

Simply Lady Elizabeth told us her story—a grim corroboration of the statement her father had made. She could not remember the time when her cousin had not been at Brief. It was his home as much as hers, and though she was given precedence, he was used as the son of the house. The Count had done much for him, but little or nothing for her, and again and again she had had to fight for her rights. But for these, she would have been gone, to make her own life, for the House of Brief was divided against itself. She hated the Count and her cousin: they hated her back: and the Count was afraid of Percy, and Percy despised the Count.

By the terms of her mother's will, she received 1,000 pounds a year. This income the Count had received until she was twenty-one, and when she had come of age he had done his best to retain the half for himself: but she had gone to the lawyers and forced his hand. Since then he had continually complained that he could not meet the expenses to which he was put, while Percy and he were always at variance—the former demanding money or money's worth, and the latter declaring with oaths that he had not the wherewithal to maintain the estate.

Her mother's will also directed that when she was twenty-one she was to be given possession of all her mother's jewels, and these, she told us frankly, were very valuable.

"And where are they?" asked Herrick of Lady Elizabeth.

"In England. They were being cleaned and reset when my mother was killed, and ever since then they've lain in the jeweler's safe. I could have had them out three years ago: but what was the good? Besides, I was afraid to have them: they might have been stolen—by someone within the house. Times without number they've urged me to have them out: Percy offered to get them at last and actually wrote out a letter for me to sign, authorizing the jewelers to hand them over to him. 'Thanks very much,' I said, 'but I'd rather they stayed where they were. But I'll lend you five pounds to go on with, if that's any good.' For once he had no answer—he couldn't get round the truth. That was six weeks ago . . ."

A sudden apprehension stabbed at my mind.

"I'll lay a monkey they're gone," I cried.

Lady Elizabeth started, and Herrick frowned.

"Why d'you say that?" said the former.

Shamefacedly, I told her of Inskip—the "very big" diamond merchant, whose company Virgil was keeping when first I had seen his face.

"But he'd never dare," she cried, flushing. "I mean, if he'd forged my hand—"

"—he would have," said Herrick, rising, "a very pressing reason for putting you out of the way."

There was a deathly silence—which I employed in cursing my reckless tongue.

Lady Elizabeth sighed.

"That's right," she said, slowly: "that's right. You know, it's painfully clear that he is his father's son."

The next day I drove her to buy some clothes in Salzburg—a very long way: but shop any nearer she dared not, because she was too well known. Brenda came with us to help her, because she had so much to buy, and in view of the miles before us, Herrick was more than content to be left behind.

For most of the day I drove, and she sat by my side, and before we got back that night I think I had told her all that ever I did. It was a dull enough record, but have it she would, "because," said she, "for two years you played the part which I should have played—you cared for my poor father, and I cannot know enough of the man who did that."

We held the first of our councils the following day—by the side of the stream in the meadows, before 11 o'clock.

I said what I had to say first—by Elizabeth's wish.

"To my way of thinking we've only one object in view, and that is to expose the man who for 22 years has passed as the Count of Brief. If we can bring this about, we shall kill two birds with one stone—we shall not only bring him down but put Elizabeth up in her proper place.

"The only way to expose him is to make him expose himself—admit officially that what we allege is true. And that he will never do, unless we can force his hand. If we can hold above him some threat sufficiently grim, the man will do as we wish.

"What we need is some information from which we can forge a weapon which we can use. And that will be hard to come by. It might not have been so hard 20 years ago; but the sources we might have turned to have almost certainly failed. Still, we're not in the hopeless position of not knowing where to begin, because we have one clew, which, if we can follow it up, may lead us straight to a source which is still alive.

"It is, I think, a promising clew, because it concerns a secret of whose existence the Head of the House should know. And Elizabeth knows of its existence: but her uncle does not . . . She knows of its existence, I say: she does not yet know what it is: but she knows where it is—roughly.

"The great tower of Brief—the great tower. There is a doorway there which no one would ever find. You must go up, counting your steps. And when you have . . .

"One thing more. Elizabeth may not like the line I suggest. The secret, whatever it is, has been most jealously guarded for hundreds of years. It may be something that no outsider should know. And if she's the slightest feeling against our doing our utmost to find it out—well, she knows that she's only to say so for me to drop this line and never touch it again."

"My dear," said Elizabeth, quietly, "my father tried to give it to you. It may be that you can use it—those were his words. Do you think I would revoke his bequest? Why, he never even charged you to tell me . . . Never mind. Of course you're right. That doorway's our only chance. I've no idea what is behind it—no more than you. But I think it may lead to something which, as you put it, will give us the weapon we need. As for looking for the doorway—we'll have to be careful, of course, but that shouldn't be very hard. As a rule Brief sleeps very sound, and if I like to return when Brief is asleep . . ." She held up a Yale key. "That's my key. It will let us into the turret which leads to my rooms. My rooms give to a landing, and the landing will lead to the tower. And nobody lives there now. The rooms are just as they were when my grandfather died: but they are not occupied. It's rather a pity, really: except for the stairs between, they make a delightful suite."

"What does it consist of?" said Herrick. "I never saw it, you know."

"Two sitting-rooms, bedroom and bathroom. Why do you ask?"

"I was wondering if they'd suit us," said Herrick. "Just for 48 hours, you know. I mean, this search will take time. And it would be so very convenient to be on the spot."

I stared at him open-mouthed, but Elizabeth threw up her head and began to laugh.

"You're true to type," she said. "The jester's counsel was nearly always the best. And why shouldn't Brenda come, too? She can look after us all and wait upon me."

Though the tower was unoccupied, its apartments were aired and dusted twice in the week. Every Monday and Thursday these things were done, and since the day was Sunday, we determined to take possession the following night. In this way for 52 hours we should have the tower to ourselves.

That Sunday afternoon Brenda and Winter were told the most of the truth, for, though I am sure that both would have trusted us blindly and would have done without question whatever we asked, it would have been unfair as unwise to make such demands upon such fidelity.

"You see," I said to Winter, "we couldn't attempt such a show, unless there was someone outside not only who knew where we were but with whom we could keep in touch. All Tuesday and Wednesday I want you to watch the castle—especially, of course, the great tower. I shall signal to you, if I want you, and what I want you to do. We'll arrange a code later on."

Our slight preparations were made the following day. We bought some torches and kanpsacks, and food for two days was put up. Madame Revoke was told that we were going to stay at some hunting-lodge, to which her guests of the summer had two or three times repaired, and though she was something surprised that we should travel by night, instead of by day, Lady Elizabeth Virgil could do no wrong in her eyes.

For the search itself, I could not think what to take. I could hardly believe that we should have to use force: yet things which have lain undisturbed for a number of years are apt to get stiff or clogged as the case may be. In the end, after much reflection, I decided on a mallet and chisel, some oil and two measuring-rules; if what we found were to show that this rather meager equipment was not enough, we should have to withdraw—and return with the stuff we required.

That afternoon we rested, to save our energy for the work to come. And at half past eleven that night Winter set us down at the mouth of the entrance-drive. He was not to return to Raven, but to berth the Rolls where he could in the country beyond the foot-hills which rose to the south of Brief: and then at dawn he would make his way over those foothills and down to the belvedere. Half an hour later we saw the castle before us, a shadowy mass without form, charged on the sable field of the woods behind.

So dark was the night that had there been sentries posted about the house, they could not have seen us moving five paces away, and since Elizabeth said that no watch was kept, we followed her boldly up to the foot of the pile. Because we were shod with rubber, we made but the slightest sound.

Elizabeth skirted the walls, and we passed three staircase-turrets, to come to a fourth. And there she stopped, before a door or postern set in its base.

I, who was next behind her, moved to her side.

"I want you to pass me," she breathed, "as soon as I've opened the door. Turn to your right up the steps, and wait till I come. I'll shut the door when you're in."

I passed the word to Brenda, who gave it to Herrick in turn.

Then Elizabeth used her key—but the door stayed shut.

In desperation she set her weight to the oak.

Then she took her key from the latch.

"My God," she said, "it's bolted. What shall we do?"

"Somewhere close by," I whispered. "Where we can talk."

She led us away from the turret and presently down some steps.

"Listen," I said. "There must be windows left open a night like this. Isn't there one I can climb to?"

Elizabeth shook her head.

"You'd break your neck," she said. "And if you could get in somewhere, you'd never find your way down to open to us."

"Then, what of the tower itself? Isn't there any way I can get into that? Once inside the tower, I couldn't go wrong and its door's in the courtyard, isn't it?"

Elizabeth shrugged her shoulders. "but it's heavily barred. It's on the northern side—not very high up. It's a chance in a million, but one of those bars might be loose."

Elizabeth led us back to the castle wall. There she turned to the left, and we followed her as we had come. Then she turned to the right, and we passed the mouth of the archway which led to the small courtyard: and after a little she turned to the right again . . .

Some 13 feet up I made out what looked like a cage, sticking out of the wall. Straining my eyes, I counted four vertical bars, not flush with the wall, but projecting, which meant, of course, that the casement which they were guarding was made to open outwards into the air.

"Hopeless," said Elizabeth, quietly. "I thought it was lower than that."

"I think I can make it," I said. "From Herrick's houlders, of course. And if there's nothing doing, I've only to drop." I took off my knapsack and jacket, and rolled up my sleeves. "Can I use a torch with safety, to look at the bars?"

Elizabeth nodded.

"But do be careful," she said.

Herrick spoke out of the darkness.

"I'm prepared to contribute," he said. "Be sure of that. But I'm no acrobat. I'm willing to try and carry your 15 stone, but as soon as you feel me going, you'd better jump. And how d'you propose to begin? Are you going to run up me, or something?"

I made him take off his knapsack and stand to the wall, and I begged him to hold his peace, because if he made me laugh, we might both come down. Then I turned again to my lady.

"Once I'm up there," I said, "we shan't be able to talk: yet there may be something I find that I want to say: in that case I'll drop my handkerchief. If I do that, will you climb on to Herrick's shoulders? And I'll lean down and tell you whatever it is."

"Yes, indeed. But, Richard, you will be careful? Supposing those bars aren't sound."

"I promise to test them," I said, "before I go up."

A moment later I was standing on Herrick's shoulders, with my chisel and a torch in my pockets and both my hands on the bars.

These were in good condition, and when I had tried them once, I drew myself up by inches until I had a foot in the cage . . .

Within this, the window was open. If I could displace but one bar, the trick would be done.

As I have said, the cage was made of four bars. All four were sunk in the stone above and below the window they were to protect: but the outer two were also tied by cross-bars to the window's jambs. It was, of course, hopeless to try to move either of these, for each was held at six points: but the two middle bars were held at two points only, where top and bottom were bedded into the stone.

Trespasser Steals 100-Foot Chimney and Disposes of His "Haul" for $150

In an ironical fling at French justice under "Napoleon le Petit," Victor Hugo once declared that if he were ever accused of stealing Notre Dame he would get out of the country. From Channing Town, in Essex, England, Arthur Joseph Sayers, twenty-five, recently stole a chimney 100 feet high, writes a correspondent in the New York Times, and confessed the fact at the petty session of Romford when charged with grand larceny by the owner of the chimney, Maj. Champion Branfill.

Bewilderment in the petty session subsided after Sayers told how he had managed to carry off such a tall brick structure with an average diameter of eight feet, the whole weighing over 30 tons. He pulled the chimney apart brick by brick. They made three loads and he had sold them all for $150 to a man who had him independently arraigned for obtaining money under false pretenses. For each offense Sayers got three months—sentences to run concurrently.

A few moments before, the detective inspector of Scotland Yard, who had been ordered to hunt down the chimney and capture its purloiner, had testified that the chimney stood in the middle of a brick yard, the property of the major. The yard had not been worked for some years, and the theft of the chimney was not discovered until, as there appeared to be a good chance to sell it, the major, who lived in Northumberland, instructed a firm of London solicitors to make an inventory of the appurtenances.

Defendant told of visiting the brickfields on several occasions and taking iron away. No one seemed to take any notice of him, and he finally decided to pull down the chimney, which he pleaded was in such a terrible condition that if he had not taken it down it would have fallen down.

Tallinn Steeped in Legend

Tucked away in a corner of the Baltic sea's coastline, lies the land of Estonia—once the western outpost of Russian Czarist domination. Tallinn, the capital and largest city, is steeped in legend and history. On the pages of northland history, Tallinn has played a prominent part. Founded by King Valdemar II of the Danes, Tallinn—then known as Reval—grew into prominence as a trade center, due to its geographical location. Here—as in Visby on the Isle of Gotland—members of the powerful Hanseatic league met to trade and barter products of the East and West. Through the centuries, this area became the "football" of the Baltic with Sweden, Russia and Poland playing the most prominent roles. Peter the Great of Russia was the ultimate victor and Estonia and Tallinn remained under Russian rule until the World war. In 1920 the new republic was born and Tallinn took its place among the capitals of the world.

The Fords Tell Their Plans for 1939

Henry and Edsel Ford, on the occasion of the 35th anniversary of the founding of the Ford Motor Company, June 16, 1938

IF WE KNEW anything better we could do for the country than make good motor cars, we would do it.

By every one doing his best in the job he thinks most useful, this country is going to regain its momentum. We have tried to do our best in our job.

When business was suddenly halted in its recovery more than a year ago, we determined that we should keep going anyway, if not at full-volume motor car production, then at getting ready for greater motor car values that would help future production.

EXPANDING FOR THE FUTURE

We began to build 34 million dollars' worth of new plants and equipment. We felt that if we could not employ all our men building motor cars, we would employ as many as we could building better production facilities.

We were told, of course, that this was no time for expansion, that a wiser business policy would be to "hold everything"—which means, stop everything. But no one ever got anywhere standing still.

Besides, we are not defeatists. We do not believe this country has seen its best days. We believe this country is yet in the infancy of its growth. We believe that every atom of faith invested in our Country and our People will be amply justified by the future. We believe America is just beginning. Never yet have our People seen real Prosperity. Never yet have we seen adequate Production. But we shall see it! That is the assurance in which we have built.

Business is not just coming back. It will have to be brought back. That is now becoming well understood in this country; for that reason 1939 will be a co-operative year. Manufacturers, sellers and buyers will co-operate to bring back the business that is waiting to be brought back.

This construction program is almost completed. It has increased activity and payrolls in a number of related industries. It has given us better facilities for building better cars and trucks, and eventually our new tractor which is being perfected.

THIS MEANS MORE VALUE

The current program has provided a new tire plant, which will turn out a part of our tire requirements . . . a new tool and die plant that will help us cut the cost of dies . . . and a steel-press plant that will enable us to make more of our own automobile bodies. These are in addition to the plants we already had for producing glass, iron, steel, plastics, and many other things.

We don't supply all our own needs, of course, and never expect to. The Ford engine is one thing that no one's hand touches but ours. Of nearly everything else we use we build some quantity ourselves, to find, if possible, better and more economical ways of doing it. The experience and knowledge we gain are freely shared with our suppliers, and with other industries.

We take no profit on anything we make for ourselves and sell to ourselves. Every operation, from the Ford ships which first bring iron ore to the Rouge, is figured at accurate cost. The only profit is on the finished result — the car or truck as it comes off the line. Some years, there is no profit for us. But we see to it that our customers always profit. A basic article of our business creed is that no sale is economically constructive unless it profits the buyer as much as or more than the seller.

Our new plants have helped us build more value into all our cars for 1939. That means more profit on the purchase to the purchaser.

We have not cut quality to reduce costs.

We simply will not build anything inferior.

NEW TESTING EQUIPMENT

While we were putting up new plants to produce cars, we constructed new equipment to test them. The first weather tunnel of its kind ever built for automobile research went into operation at our laboratories this year.

It makes any kind of weather to order. The weather it delivers every day would take months to find in Nature. Our cars are weather-tested to give you good service in any climate anywhere.

In other tests, every part of the car is punished unmercifully. Then our engineers tear it down to see if they can find abnormal wear or any sign of weakness.

The money we spend on tests saves you money on repairs. And your family car is safer and more dependable when we put it in your hands.

THE NEW CARS

We have two new Ford cars for 1939—better cars and better looking—but we also have an entirely new car.

It's called the Mercury 8. It fits into our line between the De Luxe Ford and the Lincoln-Zephyr. It is larger than the Ford, with 116-inch wheelbase, hydraulic brakes, and a new 95-horsepower V-type 8-cylinder engine.

We know that our 1939 cars are cars of good quality. We think they're fine values in their price classes.

With new cars, new plants, new equipment, the whole Ford organization is geared to go forward.

VOTE TUESDAY!

This is the eleventh hour of the 1938 political campaign and millions of Americans stand on the threshold of polling booths, prepared to decide issues of far-reaching moment on Tuesday, November 8.

Not in the convention halls of 1940, but among the victors of next week's elections, forecasters expect to find the likeliest candidates for carrying the major parties' battle-standards two years hence.

Of scarcely less importance to the country will be the outcome of the popular initiatives which voters of California, Oregon, and Washington, have placed on their ballots to halt persistent industrial strife.

California, with other Pacific Coast states, has been a storm center of the C. I. O. - A. F. of L warfare. Her attempt to protect herself from the disruptive effects of this conflict, with its attendant jurisdictional disputes and abuse of picketing, is considered a major step for peace in this state. Approval of the Labor initiative, State Proposition One, may well become a strong factor in encouraging the leaders of Labor's legions to put their disunited house in order elsewhere.

Your vote on Tuesday will help decide that all-important question!

And, right on down the line, we recommend a "Yes" vote for Propositions 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 12, 14, 15, 16 and 17.

And a "No" vote against Propositions 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 and 25.

And, a "Yes" vote for County Propositions 1 and 2.

Be sure to vote on Tuesday.

The two finest Ford cars in the 35 years of the company's history will be given their first public showing today in dealerships throughout the country. The cars are the 1939 Ford V-8 and the 1939 DeLuxe Ford V-8. They are individually styled. Both are of compelling beauty. Both have hydraulic brakes.

Introduction of the new Fords climaxes a year of activity which saw the company embark on its current plant expansion program, bring out its entirely new Mercury 8, and establish the Lincoln-Zephyr still more firmly as the acknowledged style leader in the automobile industry.

The DeLuxe Ford V-8, with wholly new streamlines, has a distinctive appearance of its own. It has a deep hood with long lines unbroken by louvres, low radiator grille in bright metal, and wide-spaced headlamps set into the fenders. The words Ford DeLuxe, in script letters of chrome, are divided at the front of the hood. The hood handle is concealed in a vertical extension of the radiator ornament.

The 1939 DeLuxe is powered by an 85 horsepower V-8 engine of even more rugged construction than the 5,000,000 already in use. The Ford V-8 is offered with the same engine as the DeLuxe or with the economy 60 horse power V-8 engine.

Welcome Reception Staged At Masonic Home For Hartman

MASONIC HOME, DECOTO—A royal welcome home after an absence of ten weeks at the Merritt Hospital in Oakland was extended to Supt. Frank B. Hartman by the members of the home family Saturday evening.

Mr. Hartman responded with considerable feeling, expressing his gratitude and thanking everybody for many expressions of esteem sent him at the hospital.

A. D. Block, foreman of the Masonic Home laundry, in which a number of Decoto people are employed, and Mrs. Block, have returned form an 8000 mile automobile trip across the continent, occupying a month. Hanging Shelves You Can Make of Spools

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

A letter received from a reader says, "I have found so many helpful things in your Book 1—SEWING for the Home Decorator, I wonder if you have any ideas on fixing up spools? I have in mind the spool book shelves and corner shelves they used long ago." It's probably the general revival of Victorian ideas in decoration that has started everyone thinking of spool shelves.

We seemed to remember that the shelves we had seen years ago in old parlors were put together with colored cords. We tried this but the shelves were not rigid as the cords stretched. So we used wire and the result has been a substantial set of shelves strong enough to hold reasonably heavy articles.

A little less than 12½ feet of wire was used for the shelves shown here. Two sizes of spools were used. Shelves, spools, wires and all were finally painted to match the brightest tone in the room color scheme—in our case it was peacock blue. There are picture directions like these on every page of Book No. 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator. If your house is your hobby, it will be full of thrills for you. Don't go through the holidays with shabby curtains or slipcovers. This book illustrates every step in making new ones. Book 2: Novelties and Embroidery, shows how to make dozens of Christmas gifts from odds and ends of material. Books are 25 cents each. If you order both books an interesting quilt leaflet included free. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Modern Bethlehem

Bethlehem in Judea today has a mayor and a fine police station. A road sign at its city limit warns chauffeurs to "drive slowly," and the girls who used to carry classic pottery to the well now arrive there with an old gasoline can to carry the water.

This is the time of year when town and rural folk are getting ready for Winter. Your car is as important then as now. Give it a thought. Be forehanded. Stop at your favorite dealer and let him drain the Summer-worn oil and put in Acid-Free Quaker State Winter Oil. You'll be thankful the first cold morning.—Adv.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Try Vinegar.—Wipe the pantry shelves with a cloth dipped in vinegar. It gives a fresh and pleasant atmosphere to the larder and repels flies.

The Singing Kettle.—When a coal stove is used it is foolish to allow the teakettle to be empty at any time. One always can find a use for boiling or very hot water.

Bright Silverware.—When your silverware becomes tarnished, place it in potato water and let it stand one hour. Take out and wash and it will look like new.

Cleaning Oven Dishes.—Marks on fireproof oven dishes can be removed by rubbing with common salt while the dish is still hot.

Wait, Mother—Ask Your Doctor First

Never give your children unknown "Bargain" remedies to take unless you ask your doctor.

A mother may save a few pennies giving her children unknown preparations. But a child's life is precious beyond pennies. So—Ask your doctor before you give any remedy you don't know all about.

And when giving the common children's remedy, milk of magnesia, always ask for "Phillips'" Milk of Magnesia.

Because for three generations Phillips' has been favored by many physicians as a standard, reliable and proved preparation — marvelously gentle for youngsters.

Many children like Phillips' in the newer form — tiny peppermint-flavored tablets that chew like candy. Each tablet contains the equivalent of one teaspoonful of the liquid Phillips.' 25¢ for a big box.

A bottle of Phillips' liquid Milk of Magnesia costs but 25¢. So—anyone can afford the genuine. Careful mothers ask for it by its full name "Phillips' Milk of Magnesia."

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your common cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you may get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained. Creomulsion is one word, ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)
